Lurana has spent her whole life among the stars, living in the home of the starry Gods. But then her father, the star itself, is killed in a mysterious accident. And the light of the stars, that's Lurana's life. When Lurana's father dies she is left alone and without magic, and returns to her home planet of humanity, where she encounters people who may be more alien than the stars themselves. As Lurana begins to learn the ways of her people and of the world, a strange new power starts to awaken inside her. And Lurana and her sister Kalona start to make plans to return to their home planet, the stars... The paperback of Sisters and Sorcerers, will be available next month. There are also two eBooks in the series available on Amazon. You can also check out the authors new book about living and working on the farm here. Q: PHP $_POST array not receiving more than one row I have made a form in PHP which processes a value, then adds it to an array (fetching it from a MySQL database) and then prints out that value in a different part of the page. $quizResult = $db->query("SELECT id FROM quiz"); while($row = $quizResult->fetch_assoc()){ $quizID = $row['id']; $_POST["quiz$quizID"] = "something"; } print_r($_POST); The problem is that, it only ever prints out the last row of the database and it ignores the rest of the rows. If anyone could help me out with this problem it would be appreciated. A: The variable $quizID is not declared. There should be: $quizID = $row['id']; instead of: $_POST["quiz$quizID"] = "something"; The Center for Computational Vision and Learning (CCVL) is a multidisciplinary research group whose mission is to empower vision scientists by developing and deploying large-scale, spatially extended and semi-automated systems for visual recognition, analysis, and modeling.
