The NGO ONE has been working to combat this problem for some time, and now it is taking on a new initiative, the first-ever UNESCO-certified African School of Malaria Control: a blended learning platform, teaching health education to the community on a large scale. Stakeholders at the launch of the project are seen at the Ilorin Institute of Public Health in Nigeria. It is with great hope and energy that we launch the first-ever UNESCO-certified African School of Malaria Control, an innovative blended learning platform, to provide and boost the capacity of communities in Nigeria to address the burden of malaria. Benin, Mali, Ghana, Senegal, Burkina Faso, Zimbabwe, Uganda, Tanzania, Cameroon, Nigeria, Egypt, and Ethiopia, the first countries to be a part of this unique initiative and we are so excited for you to join us on this journey.

The project is a collaboration between the National Malaria Control Programme in Nigeria, United States Agency for International Development (USAID) and the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF).

For the past five years, the Nigeria component of this initiative has focused on the participation of young girls to end the skewed gender gap in access to healthcare in Nigeria. Our successful efforts have been led by Dr. Faith Umi at the Ilorin Institute of Public Health in Nigeria, with support from the NGO ONE. The project is driven by the belief that a supportive environment, including media, teachers, and access to the internet, are essential in addressing the issue of gender-based unequal access to healthcare. This initiative builds on and strengthens Nigeria's ongoing work on malaria control. The project also aims to contribute to malaria control and elimination in the rest of the countries in the region where the initiative is being implemented. Empowering communities Ten years ago, when the project first started, the training resources were available in written format, but very difficult to access due to lack of an internet connection at household level. Now through the use of advanced technologies, the training is available to families who
