I am using ASP.NET Core to handle the form validation. When an application is deployed, I want to allow end users to enter email addresses in any valid format (local, national, international). The format should be validated on the client side (HTML5 pattern attribute). @Html.TextBox("email", null, new { htmlAttributes = new { @class = "form-control", @pattern = "^[A-Za-z0-9._%+-]+@[A-Za-z0-9.-]+\.[A-Za-z]{2,4}$" }) Is there any workaround to allow the validation of the HTML5 pattern attribute with an attribute binding on the client side? A: I created an HTML5Webview project to validate the input against a HTML5 pattern on the client side. A: As of this writing, @brynth in #brynth's comment is correct. I've tried it with WebEssentials 2017, an npm package for ASP.NET Core/JavaScript in VS 2017 and it works! However, I did have to manually add the npm package to my project and get WebEssentials up and running. Here's what I did to get my form to work, thanks to @WesDarksmith: Open Package Manager Console in VS Run npm install --global html5-webview Since you didn't add it as a dependency you'll need to reinstall the package Close the Package Manager Console Rebuild the project Now that I had the package installed I was able to do this in my _Layout.cshtml view @{ ViewBag.Title = "Home Page"; } @ViewBag.Title.
