. show them. remove or add layers. This can be used as either an add-on to your existing uv packer, or you can build a whole new uv packer. When you don't have enough wall thickness to fill the uv space, this can be used to correct that situation. You can even use it to fill a hole in the mesh. IPackThat is my preferred uv-packer and it has some of the best features that I have found in any uv-packer. With uv-pandit, I created a new tool which helped me get very close to the perfect result. It was also free. So I started using that tool and I really got the results that I was seeking with that tool. So now I have no reason to keep looking for a free uv-packer that can accomplish the same results. I love uv-pandit, but I needed another tool to make certain adjustments and it doesn't work with my new brush workstation. IPackThat is really nice and powerful and I can not say enough good things about it. I would recommend it to anyone. IPackThat. It is a commercial product. If I really needed to have a uv packer, I wouldn't buy it. It's too expensive for me. IPackThat is my preferred uv-packer and it has some of the best features that I have found in any uv-packer. Tzas has many functions, but I only know how to use two or three. The good thing about Tzas is that it's free. But I don't use it for commercial reasons.
